This guide was made possible through a grant from the Richard S. Brownlee Fund from the State Historical Society of Missouri and support from Missouri State University.

Introduction

Missouri has a wealth of oral history recordings that document the rich and diverse population of the state. Beginning around 1976, libraries, archives, individual researchers, and local historical societies initiated oral history projects and began recording interviews on audio cassettes. The efforts continued into the 1980s. By 2000, digital recorders began replacing audio cassettes and collections continued to grow where staff, time, and funding permitted. As with other states, oral history projects were easily started, but transcription and indexing efforts generally lagged behind. Hundreds of recordings existed for dozens of discreet projects, but access to the recordings was lacking or insufficient. Larger institutions had the means to transcribe, index, and catalog their oral history materials, but smaller operations sometimes had limited access to their holdings. Access was mixed, and still is. This guide attempts to aggregate nearly all oral history holdings within the state and provide at least basic, minimal access to holdings from the largest academic repository to the smallest county historical society. The effort to provide a guide to the oral history collections of Missouri started in 2002 with a Brownlee Fund Grant from the State Historical Society of Missouri. That initial grant provided the seed money to create and send out a mail-in survey. The survey targeted a broad constituency. All academic, public, and private libraries were sent a survey as well as county museums and historical societies. Even private individuals with known collections were contacted. By the end of the year, the results were in from a wide variety of repositories. The results were compiled and updated in 2012, and a guide to the repositories and their holdings was created using the Adobe PDF format.

Information for the guide was provided by mail-in or online surveys filled out by the repository's primary contact person. In most cases, this information was verified and supplemented by follow-up emails, phone calls, and, in some cases, on-site visits. When known, the full legal name of the repository or organization is used. In some instances, certain recordings are included that are not formal oral history interviews as defined by the Oral History Association. In these cases, the compiler preferred to err on the side of inclusion by using a liberal interpretation of what constituted an oral history interview. Researchers may decide for themselves whether or not these are suitable for their needs. Additionally, some interviews listed in this guide were conducted by students, not formally trained historians. This guide does not make qualitative judgments regarding the hundreds of interviews listed herein.

Finally, any errors within are solely my fault. The intent is to update this guide annually. If readers find any omissions, incorrect descriptions or factual errors, or if your repository expands its holdings, please contact me and I will correct and amend as soon as possible.

Acknowledgements

Without question, the success of this guide rests on the shoulders of the tireless librarians, curators, and archivists who maintain the collections and shared information on the dozens of projects held in Missouri's repositories. Their willingness, in 2002 and then ten years later, to complete the survey and answer follow-up questions made this guide a reality. Special thanks is due to Jeff Corrigan of the State Historical Society of Missouri's Oral History Program; the Brownlee Fund Committee for providing the start-up grant; and Missouri State University for granting the sabbatical necessary to complete the project. Leads, tips, and suggestions for finding hidden, unprocessed, or privately held collections were graciously provided by Lynn Morrow, Jeff Corrigan, Annie Busch, John Bradbury, and Byron Stewart. Special acknowledgement is extended to Anne Baker, Tracie Gieselman-Holthaus, and Shannon Mawhiney for running MSU's Special Collections & Archives Department during my semester-long absence. Due to their efforts, and the work of Dean Neosha Mackey and colleagues David Adams and Lynn Cline, I never had to worry about concerns or issues "back at the shop." And, finally, special thanks is extended to my daughter, Allison, who tolerated (or perhaps simply ignored) my obsession with Missouri's oral history collections.

Center for Ozarks Studies [RG 8.11], Oral History Series

Number of Interviews: Approx. 120 interviews on 248 cassettes and 5 reel-to-reel tapes

Dates of Interviews: 1979-1995

Principle Interviewers: Bob Flanders, Lynn Morrow, Bob Moore, and students

Description: The Center for Ozarks Studies (COS) was established in 1979. Dr. Robert Flanders, professor of history, served as director for the Center. COS's mission was to promote, study, and research the Ozarks region. COS provided a variety of services in the form of consultation, documentary information, public programs, and local history courses. The Center also conducted several grant-funded projects which included films related to Shannon County, Missouri, oral histories, and historical research on the Mark Twain National Forest. The information within the Center for Ozarks Studies material encompasses a wide time frame, beginning as early as the mid-1800s and ending in the 1990s. The Center closed in 1995. The Ozarks region includes Arkansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma. Most of the material relates to various grants and research projects conducted by the Center. A number of series within the collection contain oral histories. Series VI, Oral History Transcripts; Series VII, Buffalo River Oral History Project; Series IX, Shannon County Project Oral History Transcripts; Series XXII, Audio Cassettes; and Series XXIII, Reel-to-Reel Tapes, all pertain to the Center's oral history efforts. For a complete listing of interviewees and topics, see the detailed box list at:

Greene County Historical Society Records, Interviews [M038]

Number of Interviews: 7

Dates of Interviews: 1969; 1993; 1996

Principle Interviewers: n.a.

Description: Since 1954, the Greene County Historical Society has fostered and maintained an interest in the history of Springfield and Greene County through programs, publications, projects, and observances. The Society has conducted a few interviews with local individuals over time. Interviewees include Charles Sheppard, John L. Draheim, L. E. Meador, Louise Knox Hull, Vera Kathleen Price Chandler, and York Johnson.

Gordon McCann Folk Music Collection

Number of Interviews: Approx. 80

Dates of Interviews: 1974 to 2011

Principle Interviewers: Gordon McCann

Description: The Gordon McCann Folk Music Collection consists of over 3,500 recordings of Ozarks fiddle music. The vast majority of recordings are music sessions, although Mr. McCann's first recordings were essentially oral history interviews. Beginning in 1974, Mr. McCann's interview subjects covered general folk life and storytelling. After he attended several music sessions he focused more on the various fiddle and folk tunes being played. In addition to formal interviews, dialogue among the musicians was recorded between tunes and when performers took breaks. Oral histories were transcribed and the recorded music sessions also have transcripts. Although currently unprocessed, the collection is available for research on-site.

Harry E. Appleby Veterans Oral History Project [M013]

Number of Interviews: Approx. 400

Dates of Interviews: 2004-2006

Principle Interviewers: Julie Johnson and MSU students

Description: Interviews with veterans from Southwest Missouri. The Harry E. Appleby Veterans Oral History Project is part of the Veterans History Project, initiated and sponsored by the Library of Congress. This nationwide project is an attempt to capture the memories of this region's men and women who served in the U.S. military. In addition, local interviewers have spoken with some non-veterans about their experiences during war time. Conflicts covered include World War II, the Korean War, Vietnam, the Gulf War, and the war in Iraq. See finding aid for complete listing of interviewees: <http://library.missouristate.edu/archives/speccoll/m013.htm>.
